Growing up can be hard work - especially where building friendships and getting to know yourself are concerned. Take it from Lexie, a first-grader, whose moxie is sometimes be overshadowed by self-doubt. Through a series of unfortunate events followed by help from a few unlikely friends, she discovers just how important it is to be herself and reemerges as the blue-tutu-wearin six-year-old girly-girl whose powerful transformation is influential. Which, incidentally, is just what the 24 first-grade authors from Mrs. Latdrik s class in Indianapolis, Indiana desire for you, too. Buckle up, enjoy the ride, and get out that signature piece. BE YOU! Learning in Mrs. Sarah Latdrik s classroom community, these 24 aspiring writers believe that all students voices should be nurtured and respected as active participants in Liberty Park Elementary s culture because kids do make a difference - especially where issues of social justice are concerned. Looping up from kindergarten into first-grade together, Latdriks (as they are warmly referred to by their teacher) hold themselves to high standards as friends, learners, and citizens and work...
