Excerpt: .I never would know: In future, wherever I be, Mid scenes of contentment or strife, My soul shall be looking to thee, Thou solace and comfort of life. E en here those enjoyments I ll prove, That from thee unceasingly flow, Though noise and confusion s above, And sorrow and sighing below. The vessel glides swiftly from shore, The sails are unfurl d to the wind, The billows unfeelingly roar, And awaken the griefs of the mind. Farewell to thy wave-whiten d shore! I go to the ends of the earth; I leave, to revisit no more. When far o er the ocean away, When parted by billowy seas, Oh! fondly my mem ry will stray O er the scenes of my happier days. EARLY FRIENDS. And where are those we valued once, --When life was young and gay, --The friends of earlier years?...
